

“ACCADEMIA DELLE SCIENZE DI TORINO”

The Accademia delle Scienze di Torino was instituted in 1783 by Victor Amadeus III, King of Sardinia. Since 2000 the Academy has been a private institution (Foundation). As defined in its statute, its role is to “contribute to scientific progress, supporting research and seeing to the publication of its results, contributing to the spread of knowledge through congresses, conventions, seminars, lectures and all other suitable means, and further by providing opinions and making proposals to public institutions and private organisations in its fields of competence”. Today the Academy comprises about 350 members, both Italian and foreign, divided into two classes, “Physical, Mathematical and Natural Sciences” and “Moral, Historical and Philological Sciences”.
